The Blind Writer

Exercise: The blind writer...

Prompt:

You should have two index cards. On one index card, write the following:

The blind writer PART 1.

A single phrase with a subject containing an adjective and a noun that describes a profession. Try to find something ironic in the combination of modifier and modified.

For example: The blind writer...

The blind writer PART 2.

On the other index card, write a phrase with a predicate, (a verb and an object) that complete the sentence.

21

For example: ...ate her pages.

The full sentence might be, "The blind writer ate her pages." But we're breaking the sentence into two parts on two separate index cards.

The blind writer PART 3.

Next: hand the card with the SUBJECT to the person on your righthand side, and the card with the PREDICATE to the person on your left-hand side. You now should have two cards in front of you with a subject and predicate that don't make sense.

The blind writer PART 4.

Now, on one of the cards, write a complete story that fits on the card that tells a story about this character and their action. Be as wild as possible: there is no right answer, only your imagination. Enjoy.

The funny lawyer put on a show for his fellow lawyers. A hair show.
All kinds of hair was on display,
Big and small, straight ~~the~~ curly, black,
yellow, green and purple. The lawyers asked him why he had so much hair.
He replied, "I'm not a very good lawyer."
